

Now for that Deferred Painting

That affair across the water has postponed a lot of essential things. It has made many products scarce. It has reduced quantities in some things. But Bay State Paint standards are unaffected. We are using the same good old materials. Our organization has met every manufacturing emergency. In protecting ourselves we have protected Bay State users and they can buy Bay State Paints knowing that they are getting the same high quality that has given this line the reputation of being "the paint with a New England Conscience."

In-or-Out Varnish is all varnishes in one. It eliminates the dabbling round with half a dozen kinds of varnish for a dozen different jobs. It will take a beautiful finish that will withstand water, steam, wind or weather.

Automobiles Damaged in Collision at Royalton Underpass.

A head-on automobile collision occurred at the Royalton underpass about noon on Sunday between a Massachusetts car, southbound, and a 1914 Model Overland touring car owned and driven by Mr. Fowler (7), a meat man and grocer of Montpelier. The Montpelier car's engine was disabled and the front of the car generally was stove up. The Massachusetts car suffered considerably but went under its own power to the Royalton garage. The Bethel garage sent men to take care of the Montpelier car, which was towed to Bethel Monday morning for extensive repairs. Mr. Fowler went home to Montpelier on the 3:19 express Sunday afternoon. He was alone in the car. Nobody in the other car was hurt.

The funeral of Don A. Wilson, who was killed last Thursday in a runaway accident, was held Saturday at the home of his brother, Hugh C. Wilson, Rev. J. Wesley Miller officiating. They Refuse Americanization.

You cannot Americanize some of the immigrants in this country no matter how much you try, or how much you do for them and their children. They absolutely refuse to be Americanized. They are here on a fortune-making enterprise and as soon as they get together what they consider a fortune they proceed to shake the dust of America off of their heels and return to their native land.

There they take up their abode as lords of some little farm or some little inn to live at ease for the rest of their days on the money they earned in Lawrence, Lowell, Haverhill, Lynn and various other American cities where they worked for "starvation wages."

Passports are now being sought by the thousands by those immigrants who want no Americanization but who do want to get back across the water with the many thousands of American dollars they have managed to hoard in stockings, money belts and various other contrivances, many of them trust in preference to our savings banks. It is estimated that during the next twelve months these returning immigrants will take out of this country

LATIN QUARTERS OVERRUN.

American Soldiers Have Virtually Taken Possession of That Part of Paris.

Paris, May 12 (Correspondence of the Associated Press).—The famous Latin quarter of Paris, home of the denizens of the world of art, is for the time being, at least, a thing of the past, willed unwittingly by an invasion of American officers stationed in the capital. So many of the soldier boys have taken up their abode in this section so that they might get a sight of "real life" that the long-time habitués have been forced to withdraw because of lack of room and high prices. The spirit of Bohemia, frightened by the influx from overseas, has spread its wings and drifted away to a more tranquil spot.

It is not dislike of the Yankees that has forced the long-haired artist to fold up his easel and steal slyly away to find himself a new home. Far from that. But even a long-haired artist who, theoretically, can live in a hole in the wall, must have at least some room to turn about in, and moreover his pocketbook is not so long as that of his friends from across the ocean. So the Latin quarter is Americanized, and apparently will remain so until Uncle Sam calls his boys home again, when probably the dreamer of dreams will find his way back to his old haunts.

There are at present perhaps three hundred American officers and soldiers living in the Latin quarter, most of them being students at the Sorbonne, where special courses have been arranged for them. Many of the artists who lived there before the war had given up their studios and answered the call of the flag. Consequently there were numerous apartments to be obtained by the Americans. The artist, upon being recently demobilized, came back to the quarter to learn that there was no place for him, at least at a price within his means, for the Americans pay well.

Artists who had remained in the quarter were little less fortunate, for they found that their purses would no longer support them in the old style in their cafes. Then, too, there undoubtedly was the question of a change of the atmosphere so dear to the artist. His privacy was a thing of the past.

Take the Cafe du Dome, for example. This used to be a famous resort for wielders of the brush and the chisel. The tables of an evening were filled with Bohemians at their games and drinks, and the two billiard tables were the battle grounds for large forces of artist combatants. The conversation centered on those things esthetic.

Now every table is surrounded by bulging khaki, the American cue expert is practicing fancy shots on the green-cloth, and the favorite chair of the painter is occupied by a Yankee captain. The conversation eddies about the Christy Mathewson and the chances of the Giants.

Occasionally an artist pokes his head in at the door timidly and then takes himself away in a fright at the unusual sight. There simply isn't room for him there any more.

MAKES SKYLINE TRAIL CLEAR.

Green Mountain Club Issues Map of Valley to the Hikers.

No matter how clearly a mountain trail may be marked upon the ground with sign-boards, blazes and cairns, a good map of the route is always a great joy to the tramp, and often is most essential. The Green Mountain Club has recognized this, and although it has to its credit one of the clearest patches of all New England, over the high spots of its northern section, it now issues a map that will be appreciated by any whose vacation plans tend in that direction.

The Green Mountain map, as now issued, covers the ground from Middlebury Gap, at the southern end of Bread-loaf mountain, north along the Skyline Trail to the northern base of Coughing Lion, or Camel's Hump, as it is often called. It is the result of several seasons of careful work by a member of the club, Captain Herbert Wheaton Congdon of New York, and has been divided into five handy sheets. Four of these represent each day's tramp, as measured by the capacity of an average mountain walker. The fifth is a trifle larger, as it duplicates in part one of the others. Every summit and spring and stream has been painstakingly located along the way. All cabins and camp sites are indicated, also such farmhouses as are so conveniently situated as to afford quarters for over night. Furthermore, there are the various intermediate side approach trails, which sometimes become of no small consequence when it is desirable to descend to the settlement for any reason.

It has been the aim of the club to provide through these sheets a combined map and guide book. To that end much detailed information as to local landmarks and distances, as to sources of supplies and as to the location of telephones even, which is not usually found on maps.
